Goal Exceeded!

In 2019, LMM officially launched Breaking New Ground: Building LMM’s Next 50 Years. We set out on a journey to raise $3.5 million, and we made a promise: to be the landlord we wish to see. That we would advance existing efforts to end family homelessness in Cleveland by restoring hope and homes for our city’s most underserved. We have exceeded our financial goal by $745,000! Our grand total raised is $4,245,000, thanks to you! Now we can focus on fulfilling our promise!

“I am thrilled at the success of the BNG campaign and appreciate the leadership and generosity of the LMM Board and the outpouring of support from individuals, churches, foundations, and corporations,” expresses Michael Sering, Vice President of Housing & Shelter. “This campaign originated with an anonymous $300k gift for Housing & Shelter, and I am excited for what that has become—a fully funded $3.5 million initiative, the signature element of LMM’s 50th anniversary, creation of a unique housing stability fund, and we are on our way to the remainder of the 20 families moving from shelter to housing.”

The $4.2 million in funds raised will help to both directly remold the homes and to sustain the project through a Family Stability Fund. So far, three families have left homelessness behind and moved into their BNG homes. We continue to purchase and renovate houses in the St. Clair-Superior neighborhood, with several being ready for move in by fall.

“The partnerships and support have been critical, uplifting, and inspirational,” says Sering. “On behalf of the families, I thank everyone who helped make this happen.”

THANK YOU!

LMM staff have the pleasure of welcoming the Breaking New Ground families home. Here’s James Walker’s encounter, as told by shelter staff member Lydia Bailey.

We heard good news on a staff call today, which made us all pause and take note. James Walker, then-Projects Coordinator with Housing & Shelter, gave us an account of a family moving into one of the Breaking New Ground homes.

James reports, “We moved a family into one of the properties: a mother and three children. When I opened the front door, the youngest child, age five, was there, wide-eyed with a big smile. She greeted me before I could even greet her. All of the children were very excited. I welcomed them. One of the properties: a mother and three children. When I opened the front door, the youngest child, age five, was there, wide-eyed with a big smile. She greeted me before I could even greet her. All of the children were very excited. I welcomed them. One of the children was smile, and didn’t say much. It was veryprocessing this one for a while.”

“The five-year-old really got me; reminded me of my own grand-daughter who will be eight. They’re so similar, energetic and ebullient; very strong characters. Her mother wouldn’t let her do certain things and she was trying to get my attention. But I was doing a walkthrough, a checklist process with the child, and the child would come back with ‘I’m going to do it.’”

At this point James is laughing hard and I look around at everyone on the staff call. We are all laughing.

James continues, “Both the younger girl and the 10-year-old son were fascinated by the faucets in the kitchen and the bathrooms. The fixtures allow the stream of water to be adjustable and directed. The young girl was trying to get her mother’s attention and then she was trying to get my attention. But I was doing a walkthrough, a checklist process with the mother. The little girl kept calling us to in. I spoke to her like I did all of the kids, but she wasn’t very talkative. She nodded as she smiled, very subtly. That’s all she did. But she was more reserved. She nodded as we left and when we have that moment, it behooves one of those experiences that we work for, one of those experiences that we work for, one of those experiences that we work for, one of those experiences that we work for, one of those experiences that we work for, one of those experiences that we work for, one of those experiences that we work for, one of those experiences that we work for, one of those experiences that we work for, one of those experiences that we work for, one of those experiences that we work for.

Speaking for all of us, James concludes, ‘It’s one of those experiences that we work for, and when we have that moment, it behooves us to just take the time and process it. It’ll be processing this one for a while.’
